COLLECTION SUMMARY
of the
WALTER FULCHER COLLECTION

Elvie Fulcher Williams, sister of Arl Walter Fulcher, donated the materials in this collection to Sul Ross State University Archives on March 26, 1985. The collection comprises Walter Fulcher's drafts of the manuscript which was published posthumously in book form as The Way I Heard It, Tales of the Big Bend, edited by Elton Miles; the correspondence of Elvie Fulcher Williams with potential publishers and from recipients of copies of the book; newscuttings; and biographical materials about Arl Walter Fulcher including his letters home from the French front during World War I.

Arl Walter Fulcher was born December 21, 1887, in Lampasas County, Texas. Walter, second child, first son of Franklin Porter Fulcher and Cora Etta Fulcher, was known in his family of three sisters and six brothers as "Brother." After he has left home, he signs his letters home "Bro," and to the next generation, this bachelor uncle is "Uncle Brother."

In 1901, the family moved from Lampasas County to Sterling County. Fran this time on, Walter says in "The Ketchum Train Robbery," he was pretty much on his own. By 1912, Walter was working on a ranch south of Sheffield, Texas, observing first hand the events he recounts in the train robbery tale in The Way I Heard It. During this period, he taught himself the Spanish that enabled him to converse like a native and to read Spanish literature. In this way throughout his life Walter added to his eight years of "formal" schooling.

In May of 1918, although he considers that he "has had his day" at the ripe age of 30, Walter enlisted in the U. S. Army and was assigned, like many soldiers from Texas and New Mexico, to the First Army Mobile Veterinary Hospital. After three months training at Camp Lee, Virginia, Walter shipped out for France. In twenty-five letters from June 1918 to June 1919 (Folder of the Collection), Walter covers the war for his family with accounts of fellow Texans in France, the French people, countryside, weather, sounds and sights of air battles at the front, Christmas, visit to Paris, end of the war, delays in the mail, and especially, his veterinary duties and the contribution of the veterinary unit to the war effort. There are several letter containers in folder 1 with the stamp of the military censor. Stationery was provided for soldiers by the YMCA (Young Men's Christian Association) of America and France, Knights of Columbus, and the Red Cross. Walter reports on a minstrel show given by the 816th Infantry, a "colored" unit in the segregated army.
During Fulcher's tour of duty in France, the Fulcher family had moved from Sterling City, Texas to Fulcher Ranch, Brewster County, Texas. Walter joined them there in 1919 and ranched there for the remainder of his life. For a brief time in 1923-1926, he also worked as a carpenter for the Southern Pacific Railroad. Although he was a life-long bachelor, he took an interest in children, serving as a trustee for the Terlingua, Texas school from 1928 until his death in 1953. The schoolchildren of Terlingua dedicated a plaque to the memory of Walter Fulcher (photographs, folder 11) in a Memorial Service on March 3, 1954 (program in folder 5).

In 1941, Walter was one of the "patriotic Texans...gathering in school yards, Court House squares and vacant lots organizing 'Home Guards' to safeguard the internal security of our State" when the Texas National Guard was called to active duty in World War II. (McLane, Curren R., A History of the Texas State Guard, 1985, p. 1) The majority of Fulcher's Guard company members in Terlingua were Hispanic. Many of these Texans wrote letters to Fulcher after they were in the Army thanking him for the training they received under his command in the Guard (see folder 4). The patriotism of the Fulcher family was the topic of a newspaper article in 1942 (folder 12). During World War II, Walter's sister, Elvie Fulcher Williams, served as a WAC (photograph, folder 11). In 1944, Walter's father, F. P. Fulcher, died.

After the war, Walter continued to ranch and collect his tales. The manuscripts in folders 7-10 of the collection trace the organization of the tales into book form. In 1953, his nieces typed the manuscript of the book, but Walter Fulcher died that August without seeing it in print. His mother and seven of his siblings survived him. (Obituary, folder 12) For two years after his death, his sister Elvie searched for a publisher for the tales. (Folder 3 correspondence) At last, the book, The Way I Heard It, Tales of the Big Bend, edited by Dr. Elton Miles, was published in 1959. The book is dedicated to Cora Etta Fulcher, who died in 1957. Folder 2 contains responses of family and friends to the publication of the book and folder 13 contains clippings of newspaper coverage it received. The biography of Walter Fulcher by Dr. Miles in the book is based on information provided by Elvie Williams. (Folder 4)
